Sun, shade and the hillside.

SHADE FIRST The slabs and slats already do the work. Each balcony sits under the floor above, the top terraces under timber slats, the cars under the porte-cochère. Where glazing is exposed, extend the shading rather than tint the glass.

PLANTING Keep the palms, the garden courts and the planted drive. Shade over the paving and the parking bays lowers the air temperature before it reaches the walls.

COURTS AND AIR Two courtyards pull air through the plan. The indoor garden and the court paths let the living room and the suites cross-ventilate when the season allows, so the air-conditioning runs less.

WATER Hold the rains on site. Permeable paving where the drive allows, controlled drainage down the slope and the water storage in the specification.

THE HILL The house steps down the slope. The garage and cinema sit in the ground below the entrance side, the pool court 1.7 m below the garden floor: earth-sheltered rooms stay cool and the levels give every terrace a view.

ENERGY Solar and generator provision, LED lighting and efficient cooling are in the specification; the flat roof beside the slats is the sunniest surface the house has.

A cool house in Guzape is mostly a matter of shade, air and the hill. The machinery comes after.

9.1° N

LATITUDE

The noon sun stands between 57° and 90° above the horizon, and north of overhead from May to July, so overhangs work on every side.

Dec – Feb

HARMATTAN

Dry north-east winds off the Sahara: hazy, low-angled light, warm days and the coolest nights of the year.

Apr – Oct

THE RAINS

About 1,400 mm a year in convective storms, heaviest in August and September; deep slabs keep the terraces usable.

Granite
